

TOWNDOCK

HUNTERS
THEATRE

1956

Once upon a time, a long time ago, this was the land of Sachem Tackapausha, the great Indian Chief who cooked oysters on the shores of Baxter Pond.* Pottery squaws made is in the Museum of Natural History.

Then came the first white settlers to our pleasant neighborhood. Cattle grazed along our shores . . . here a cow, there a cow—many folks here and about referred to the land as COW NECK!

Cow Neck—what a name! Not nearly so high sounding as Roslyn, named after a village in Scotland, nor the one Singleton Mitchell coined for Plandome from a suburb of Paris, “pleasant home”, maybe while he was rocking on the porch of the old Anchorage* across the street.

Why not something patriotic? You can see the old gentlemen talking around a lamplit table, perhaps alongside a forebear of Whaler Cornwell.

Something really American!

Well, could anything be more American than Washington—the father of our country, first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen!

So it was, that Cow Neck became Port Washington.

* * *

Colorful stories of the Port linger on and on, joyous ones, and sometimes tragic, like the time the smugglers shot down young Benjamin Mitchell. His red waistcoat with the bullet hole can be seen this very day in the Port Washington Public Library*. A Mitchell it was, who wrote in his last will, “I commend my soul to God; my body to the earth.” The earth of the little graveyard* up there on the hill. Charles Mitchell cracked his whip as the horses galloped along to Sands Point past old Captain Sands house* which still stands, for there the big steamboat left for New York City!

* * *

The years come! The harbor is now one of the finest with the world's most beautiful craft at anchor. The years go! Yet Port Washington keeps her quaint charm and her distinct beauty.

* * *

And into this harbor come a fleet of AUTO-HEAT barges, bringing us oil to keep us comfortable. DEPENDABILITY is their by-word. With each season comes a special service, and always AUTO-HEAT stands ready, understanding each problem, serving our COMMUNITY, day in and day out.
